AOC Headquarters, Inc. 43-40 East Third Street, Toronto, Ontario, M4P 1Y1, Canada.The chemical composition of the lipopolysaccharide layer isolated from different strains of Corynebacterium amycolatum. The LPS of different strains of Corynebacterium amycolatum was isolated using chromatographic procedures. One- and two-dimensional NMR spectroscopy and mass spectrometry revealed that the LPS of the strains studied contained different amounts and kinds of sugars, phosphate, and aminosugars. The LPS of strain A contained glycerophosphoryl- and glycolipid-core oligosaccharides as well as aminosugar residues. The LPS of strain B contained glucose, phosphoryl, and galactosaminorhamnopyranosyl-core oligosaccharides as well as aminosugar residues. The strain C LPS contained glucose and galactosaminorhamnopyranosyl-core oligosaccharides.A known type of mutagen-sensitive strain of Saccharomyces cerevisiae contains deletions in both strains of the HS1 and HS2 segments of the mating type locus. These strains are defective in mating and can be rescued to mate by the presence of the wild-type mating allele of HS2. A suppressor mutation in HS1 will restore mating to the mutagenized strain which possesses the wild-type HS1 and HS2 alleles. Some recessive suppressor mutations have been shown to affect the HS1 locus. The presence of multiple copies of HS1 restore genetic functions to revertant strains which have the wild-type HS2 and HS1 alleles. Some of the mutations in HS2 have also been shown to suppress a deletion of HS1 which is on the same chromosome. These mutations are recessive for lack of mating
