Q: Point-in-Time DDL I am using DDL statements to control the entities within an application. I am somewhat aware that DDL statements are what cause all of your data to be dropped when you restart your application server. Is it possible to prevent this from happening? I want to have some code that runs at application startup that will drop all DDL-generated tables. I have a couple ideas that might work: Create a Job at startup that runs a DDL trigger to drop all the tables Have the application insert into a table which has a list of all the DDL tables that are generated (and prevent insertion into those) Are there other suggestions? A: DDL is executed at each server start-up. That is unavoidable. In the data load process, you can do a check, and pick up on this scenario and do some cleanup or some manual cleanup before the database is ready for permanent use. DDL is typically useful in read-only scenarios, so a lot of the time, there isn't a need to pre-clean up stuff that you cannot put the information in the proper place to use. A transaction is associated with a given DDL statement, so you can isolate it. If you know that you only need to drop a set of tables, the most trivial thing is to do a SELECT on some desired tables, execute that in a transaction (with BEGIN and END, so you know you started the transaction, and you can gracefully fail in your cleanup code if the DDL fails), then do a BEGIN TRAN, and do the DDL, then do a COMMIT TRAN after completing the DDL. That way, you don't "hassle" with a SET X = Y or SET Z = NULL if it doesn't work. This process could be more complex, depending on the number of tables, number of potential insert statements, etc. A good way to determine what works is to test, test, and test some more until you find a combination that seems to perform the way you need it to. The present invention relates to a fluorescent lamp, and more particularly to a fluorescent lamp capable of maintaining the luminance of the lamp. The advantages of a fluorescent lamp include low power consumption, long service life, and environmental protection. The fluorescent lamps, however, have the shortcoming of low luminance. FIG. 1 shows a conventional fluorescent lamp. The
