If you have installed the podcasts app on your device, you can listen to hundreds of shows and episodes from every major podcast network on the planet, all neatly organized and ready to browse at your convenience. There's also the "Recent Episodes" page, which shows you the last episodes you have listened to, and you can filter the results by subject or genre, and even by network. This is all wrapped up with the awesome podcast player that Apple just included in iOS 10, which makes it possible to search and play all your favorite shows right from your lock screen or notification area, and it even comes with a neat 3D cover flow-like interface, which lets you easily browse through your podcasts. For each network, you will find their own unique landing page for your podcast. Each page will feature the name of the show, the name of the podcast (which may be different from the show name), links to the full episode or to the most recent episode, and maybe even a podcast icon, in the bottom left. Most networks will also feature an "Away" icon, to help you find all of the shows you're currently away from, and a button to share the podcast through other social networks. They can be used in various fields such as catalysts, paints, ink, and pharmaceuticals, and can be produced by coating thin films or microspheres of the raw material on a substrate by wet or dry processes. The most common method for manufacturing ceramic nanoparticles is a spray pyrolysis method, in which an aqueous solution of a metal salt is sprayed and evaporated by high temperature and reduced pressure, and as a result, a metal oxide is formed. The spraying method allows for continuous production in batch processing, but it is limited to the production of very small size particles, for example, in the micrometer order and in the centimeter range. When larger particles are desired, the resulting particles are limited to colloidal in size. In order to produce larger particles, a sol-gel method has been used. The method produces oxide particles in the millimeter order by a reaction of metal ions with a compound of silicon and one or more other metal ions. In addition, when the sol-gel method is used, microsized particles can be efficiently produced. Although the sol-gel method allows for continuous production in batch processing, the cost for the raw materials is high and the yield is low. Moreover, the sol-gel method cannot produce uniform particles in the micrometer order and the like. When small particles are to be produced in the range of 1 to 10 μm , a laser ablation method is used
