But leaders of the continental bloc have had to battle rumours suggesting it has been postponed or even cancelled. Speaking in Berlin on Sunday, Merkel described the EU's development aid as a cornerstone of its foreign policy. "I am a convinced advocate of structural reforms in the world economy. On the other hand, when it comes to development assistance, I see how important it is," she said at a news conference. The EU's aid policy, she added, was "absolutely necessary for our own security, and also for Africa's long-term economic well-being". "I will fight for increased development aid," Merkel said. The German chancellor has a key hand in this year's meeting of African and EU leaders on 30 November and 1 December in the capital of French President François Hollande. Merkel will lead a meeting of EU leaders in Malta before the summit in Paris. But during her visit to Ghana in July and Ivory Coast in August, her spokeswoman had to put out a number of misleading statements about the summit's schedule. She had said on 29 July, after meetings with Ghanaian President John Atta Mills, that "the very important and high
