Investigation of attention bias to affective threat cues: The main effect of perceived social costs on attentional bias. The current study examined the effect of perceived social costs (i.e. emotional and functional costs) on attention bias to affective threat cues. In a community sample of 159 undergraduate students, we found an overall attention bias for affective stimuli. More importantly, perceived social costs were positively associated with attentional bias for affective cues. These findings suggest that perceived social costs might not only affect how we process information, but also how we orient our attention toward social stimuli. Theoretical and clinical implications of these findings are discussed.

Q: Python 2.7 html document object not parsing `htmlentities()` I'm trying to parse an html document with DOM using python. `titles = html_doc.body.text` This works but not `titles = html_doc.body.text.encode("utf-8")` If I do `titles = urllib.request.urlretrieve("").decode("utf-8")` It returns the same html. I've tried `json` and `xhtml` but none of those are able to decode the `htmlentities()`. Is there another way to parse and decode html from a text document? A: You should actually read the whole file; no need to decode first, as it's already decoded. If the file ends with a BOM, it's already decoded (unless you try to read it in Python 2). A: In Python, bytes are not text, but bytes. If you look at the documentation for the bytes class, there is a ton of info about it. The good news is, if you pass a string or bytes object that does not start with a BOM to the encode method (somewhat surprisingly) it will not perform any code page conversions: `>>> foo = b'abc' >>> print(foo.encode('UTF-8')) abc` However, you still need to be careful about how you interact with bytes objects. When you are parsing, this means that you need to convert bytes into text-safe strings with unicode rather than strings: `>>> foo = 'abc' >>> print(foo) abc >>> print(unicode(foo)) abc` Because bytes

What's New in the?

Q: iTunes won't recognise iMessage I have an iPhone 5S running iOS 9.0.2 and I have an Apple ID with me. I can open my Apple ID and add credit on my iTunes account. I was just about to send a text but iTunes doesn't recognise iMessage and it prompts me to turn off iMessage. I did turn off iMessage and iTunes still prompts me to turn it off. Any idea what's causing this and how to fix it? A: The Apple ID you have with iTunes is linked to another ID. I would suggest you link the ID you have in iTunes to your primary Apple ID. To do this: Click on Settings. Scroll down until you see your Apple ID. If the setting is "Primary Apple ID", click it. Follow the on-screen instructions to sign out of your primary Apple ID and then sign in to your new Apple ID. If you already have the primary Apple ID linked to the iTunes account, simply sign into your account in the App Store and add your credit to your iTunes account. (Then update your account with your new information.) If you have an Apple ID that is not linked to your primary Apple ID, then you must link it to your primary Apple ID. Follow the same steps, except that this time you select the "Other Apple ID" option instead of the primary Apple ID. Note: Currently the iTunes account and ID on Apple's website link to the same Apple ID and is able to add credit to the account. This may or may not be the case in the future. Q: Shrinking with tables (anti sql injection) I have some code:
