However, he expressed no remorse or misgivings about that decision, and Dr. Donaldson said he had no remorse or misgivings about his decision to kill Reynolds. Dr. Donaldson explained that if Reynolds had not died, the harm to his wife, especially if she suspected something, could have been great. Because any of the three potential mitigating circumstances listed above would have imposed the death sentence on Reynolds, the failure to establish at least one of them during the penalty hearing was prejudicial, and under Strickland, appellant's trial counsel should have filed an appeal from the trial judge's decision not to allow an instruction on any of them. We must therefore reverse the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeals. REVERSED AND REMANDED. MADDOX, ALMON, SHORES, BEATTY, KENNEDY, INGRAM, and COOK, JJ., concur. HORNSBY, J., concurs specially. HORNSBY, Justice (concurring specially). I concur with the main opinion that defendant was denied a fair trial by the absence of an instruction on the greater offense of capital murder. However, I would affirm the Court of Criminal Appeals's decision vacating the conviction, based on the failure to instruct on the lesser included offenses of first degree manslaughter. I do not join in the statement about the failure to seek the lesser included offense instructions. NOTES [1] The statute applicable to the failure to instruct on the greater offense in this case was Ala.Code 1975, § 13A-5-42(a), which reads as follows: "(a) The court shall not charge the jury with respect to an included offense unless there is a rational basis for a verdict convicting the defendant of the included offense." [2] In his petition for the writ of certiorari to the United States Supreme Court, Reynolds argued that his trial counsel 570a42141b
