What's New In Icons Web?

- only modern web-safe colors are used - very high quality images - trademark icons are provided - free of any copyright restrictions ------ suhail Nice idea. I don't see why we should have to "opt" in. I'm not even sure I know how you implement this idea. I can see myself using it for a new blog or website design and I can imagine adding these to current applications like Illustrator. For example I'd love to use the "Add to favorites" button in google chrome as a simple way to save any pages that load quickly to speed up my workflow. ~~~ brk _I don't see why we should have to "opt" in._ It's like the 'More/Less' on an application menu on your desktop. ~~~ suhail Yes, I actually thought of that idea at the same time and couldn't find it anywhere on here. ------ kajecounterhack Great idea! Just one thing: I wonder if you're taking the images, like this: and making a set of 1448256 image for it. You'd have to be a master of your image creation/editing program, which would suck. I'm not honestly saying that, but in my experience, it's difficult to make something look exactly the same on different screen sizes, and therefore different resolutions. You could at least start with 16x16 and work up from there. (This would be more fun if you had a whole lot of these Icons all laid out in line for us, but uh, that would be a lot of work and a lot of spacial constraints.) Thanks for the idea, it's been a long time since I used to make icons at school. ------ johnrob This is a great idea, but icons are not colors. Much as a person has a whole set of male and female icons, there are also millions of color palettes. So, there should be a way to easily
