Chrome flags are flags that run in the background checking to see if you are.Q: Best way to test for location and page loaded from external server I have a way of checking if the main domain is present in the $_SERVER["HTTPS"] variable - this works. I also have a page that I'm trying to use javascript to set a cookie with a location from an external server - like calling it from www.mysite.com/page.php. What's the best way to go about validating if the main domain is equal to my domain (www.mysite.com) AND also checking if the GET is coming from my external domain (or I'm in my IP address)? A: Assuming you are using PHP, I would validate that in the PHP code using the globals. $_SERVER['HTTPS'] === '' It would be unusual for a user's browser to resolve the hostname to the IP address. to any action at all, and thereby avoided the burden of litigating its claim. Larkin , 130 Ill. 2d at 513, 544 N.E.2d at 756. We reject defendants' argument that plaintiff suffered no prejudice in failing to raise the court's application of the doctrine of collateral estoppel below. Defendants' argument ignores the key fact that plaintiff will be required to litigate the same claims twice. At the very least, it is not clear from defendants' argument that defendants' decision to argue that plaintiff's suit was barred on the merits was the "`clear and certain' basis" that defendants provided their attorneys with ( Bell v. Pfizer , 261 Ill. App. 3d 712, 715, 635 N.E.2d 640, 643 (1994)), which defendants must prove before they can invoke the doctrine of waiver. Defendants have not cited any authority, nor have we found any, that would justify giving defendants the benefit of
