Homeowner watches in horror as neighbours fight to save their home as it starts to sink into boggy pond An owner in Newark was shocked to see someone attempt to save a neighbouring property after they started sinking into their yard When a homeowner in Newark, Nottinghamshire, started to sink into their yard, their neighbour decided to take action and got in a digger to save their property, however, they ended up making matters worse and sinking it into a nearby boggy pond instead. Sharethrough (Mobile) The former property owner, who wished to remain anonymous, explained to the Nottinghamshire Mercury: 'I have a front garden and a rear garden with our neighbour's. I used to have a wooden shed which has now been ruined by the water on their side of the boundary. I have no water at home, so it started leaking out through the boundary. 'I was walking past and noticed it was there, so I went over to talk to them about it. They didn't want to have a conversation. I said "don't it look like we need to do something about it?" They didn't want to do anything. They said 'we will get the council to send us a bill'. 'Since this was happening we couldn't get any more water, it was flooding the front yard and filling the outbuildings.' No sooner had the neighbour got a digger, they started filling up the water and emptying the pond. However, by this point, the surrounding area was already submerged in water, so the homeowner decided it was best to find a way to drain the pond on their side of the boundary. They started building up a stone wall across their boundary line and tried to drain the pond in that way, however, this left a big hole, so the neighbour ended up completing the job with a smaller wall on top of the first. The homeowner commented: 'It's not ideal – we are now paying for two walls on a boundary line. There was no intention to try and drain the pond. We don't mind [the neighbour] having their garden, but we have no idea how we are going to fix this.'Election Day is just a few days away, and most importantly, we're just a week away from the return of live hockey! The season is finally here
