Don't use software called Photoshop for any job beyond basic photo retouching. Photoshopping, and image retouching in general, is a job that falls into the category of "artistic license." That is, you use your own artistic vision to determine whether images work within the bounds of their artistic license. If an image is "perfect," then it's not needed, and it's better to eliminate it than to shape it. (See Chapter 14 for more details.) The Top Reasons Photoshop Is Useful Using Photoshop is a good solution if one needs to work with or add to an image that has already been created. Here are some of the most common uses for Photoshop: Adding, removing, and adjusting image elements such as text, outlines, and other elements: Sometimes you're dealing with a photo that's not quite right. You've taken the best shot available, but, for some reason, it just isn't quite good enough. You can add elements and remove those you don't want. You can add outlines or text, or change the color or typeface. You can smooth wrinkles, soften facial features, and give people funny wigs. And you can do all this work to an image that has a background. You can make a simple background the main focus of the image. Adding special effects: You can make dull objects look shiny, or you can add a light or shadow to a subject. You can make an object look like it's reflected in a shiny surface. You can give objects some realistic texture — sand, skin, or marble — and add specks of glitter. You can add eraser marks to an image, or make someone appear three-dimensional. You can even add patterns or designs to your subject. If you don't have those effects, you can purchase special plug-ins at your local photo store. Creating whole new images: This is the magical part of Photoshop. If you want to create a whole new look for an existing subject, go for it. This is definitely a creative act. It takes some practice to achieve the right look, but you can go for broke — creating a whole new photo out of just the content of one photo. You can begin with what you have and alter it to create the new look you want. And if you want to change things up, you have a lot of options when it comes to creating a whole new image. You can take elements from one picture to combine with elements from another; you can apply

Filters are special effects. They alter the appearance of pixels in an image, often to make it appear more artistic or less realistic. They include the following filters: Filters are programs that control the way images look. Different filters can be applied to an image to make it look different. Brush, Filter, Pen, & More Brush: Photoshop comes with 17 different brushes that you can use with the Brush Tool to give images a unique look. This tool allows you to paint over existing pixels to change the appearance of an image. You can paint using a variety of tools with different shapes, like the Brush tool, the Pen tool, Lasso tool, and Polygon tool. All of these tools take on the same name and work in the same way; you can use them to draw lines, shapes, curves, and boxes. You can also use any tool along with the eraser to remove unwanted parts of an image. Brush: Brush is the most basic, and most commonly used tool in Photoshop. You use this tool to paint, draw, and erase the appearance of pixels on an image. You do this by selecting the tool and painting on the image. To create a curved brush stroke, you hold the SHIFT key while painting. Brush Options: Brush (or Pencil) settings determine the appearance of a brush or pen you use to draw on an image. You can change the size, shape, opacity, and hardness of a brush with the following options: Brush Tool: Use the Brush tool for painting on an image. You can paint a variety of brushes, from basic ones to more advanced ones. You can hold down the SHIFT key while painting to create curved brush strokes. To create a brush stroke with the Pen tool, click the Pencil icon at the top of the Brush tool and begin painting. Click here for Brush options. You can also add a width to the edges of your lines with the Width tool. Pen Tool: The Pen tool creates a variety of lines including dotted, dashed, and solid lines. You can also add a width to the lines with the Width tool.

What's New in the Adobe Photoshop CS6?

Federal company Orica to close nine plants in Western Australia The Mt Barker bike factory, WA plant Australian miner Orica has announced plans to close nine plants in Western Australia and Queensland by 2018, despite bowing out of the mining boom. The company blamed chronic overcapacity in Western Australia for the closures, which will affect around 1,100 employees. Orica is the largest coal producer in Australia, with operations in several states, and in a statement said that "unaffordable power prices and high transport costs" had made the Western Australian mines unsustainable. "We have chosen to cease operating a number of our coke and metallurgical coal plants in WA and Queensland," Orica chief executive Brendan Pratt said. "The plants that are closing are the oldest and biggest plants in each location and cost the most to operate. "We estimate that there will be around 1,100 job losses as a result of this decision." Orica has three coke plants in WA, including the Mt Barker facility near Perth, which employs around 1,500 people. The company's Porongurup mine in the Pilbara employs about 1,500 people. The closures will be unpopular with the state's mining and political leaders. "This will have a significant impact on the mining industry in WA and will contribute to rising unemployment," said WA Premier Colin Barnett. "I acknowledge the cost of shutting these plants, but I also hope these closures are just the start of a change to make our state more attractive for future investment and employment." "These closures represent a significant issue for the regional communities and the state as a whole. "The loss of employment associated with these closures is difficult to forecast, but we expect it will be substantial and will have a number of negative effects on local and regional economies," he said. Queensland Opposition Leader Annastacia Palaszczuk said: "We are dealing with a loss of $300 million to our regional economies and it is going to have a severe impact on the workforce." A local union leader described the closures as "an appalling outcome". "The closure of these local businesses is going to be a major hit on many people," said Ian Simpson of the United Mine Workers of WA. "We're really disappointed by it, because it means we're going to lose a lot of jobs and a lot of businesses. "The West Australian
