Kafka using Java Let's say I have 2 events in a microservice application, running on Spring Boot, emitting on a separate topic on

Kafka: @EventListener public void onEvent(Event event) { processEvent(event); } @EventListener public void onEvent(Event event) { processEvent(event); } private void processEvent(Event event) { ..... if (entity.hasBeenUpdated()) { saveEntity(); } if (entity.wasUpdated()) { saveEntity(); } }

As a last step, I want to be able to emit the SaveEntity event using the produced message:

@KafkaListener(topics = "event/entity") public void receive(Entity entity) { ... if (entity.hasBeenUpdated()) { saveEntity(); } } But the received message "entity" is null, that is, I haven't received it. But, if I process it in a separate thread, it works: @KafkaListener(topics = "event/entity") public void receive(Entity entity) { ..... if (entity.hasBeenUpdated()) { saveEntity(); Thread.sleep(2000); //

PhoneGap? Currently I've got my Android application that uses PhoneGap to build for Android/iOS as one codebase and I'd like to be able to debug each of those platforms using the PhoneGap emulator. PhoneGap lets you specify the device that it should run on in the config file, but this device never appears in the emulator. Is there any way to tell PhoneGap to run my emulator rather than my device? A: Install the "Quiet PhoneGap" tool and a quiet Google Nexus device and you should be able to simulate a successful build. Quiet PhoneGap Then you could try making a new project and building it in the quiet mode. You should be able to do the same and build that on the device with everything in black & white (or in the case of the Nexus, just very subtle colors). If that's what you need, then just the build process itself would be enough, as you said. If you need to debug native things as well, you'll probably want to install the real Google device and have some kind of external testing infrastructure to point your automated build server at. However, if you're just worried about launching the right native app, you should be able to use a simulation of a real device just fine.
