FBI acknowledges 'inappropriate' text messages... Prosecution FBI acknowledges 'inappropriate' text messages between agents and prosecutors Image from Shutterstock. The Justice Department's internal affairs unit is investigating whether members of the FBI's Denver office interfered with an investigation into a sexual assault case, the Wall Street Journal (sub. req.) reports. Three prosecutors and two FBI agents exchanged sexually explicit text messages on their smartphones, apparently discussing how to handle the case. The conversations included a sexually explicit text sent from one of the prosecutors to the FBI agent, the newspaper reported. "It's kind of like doctor, patient," the prosecutor told the agent, according to the Journal. "You know, doc, patient." "I want to be a good doctor," the agent responded. According to the newspaper, the agent later "sought to have the victim drop the charges." A prosecutor reported the text messages to the Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility, which received an allegation of "prosecutorial impropriety." That report triggered the internal review. The Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility referred the findings to the FBI's Office of Public Affairs, which has not yet responded to the referral. In March, the Journal reported that the office also is investigating allegations of improper text messages between an FBI agent and a prosecutor in New Orleans. The Journal says that the probe covers several FBI offices. A New Orleans spokeswoman was not immediately available. The agent in Denver and the prosecutor
