I have tried this solution: jQuery: Changing parent element's background color with CSS Here is my code, I have pasted it in a jsfiddle: jQuery(".parent").attr("style", "background-color: red") The problem is that it would not take into consideration my child elements. A: Since you're setting the style element directly, it's not going to change the style for any descendant elements. What you need to do is find the element inside the parent and set it's style. A: Use this: $(".parent

It might be worth pointing out that China already had a system of internment camps for political dissidents in the 1980s. It might be worth pointing out that due to the lack of political dissent, the Chinese system has evolved into a system of political brainwashing and constant propaganda. It might be worth pointing out that all communist regimes have a natural tendency to become more and more authoritarian, as was the case in the Soviet Union. It might be worth pointing out that one of the worst forms of torture is by far water boarding, even for a short time is a horrifying experience (See the movie "The Manchurian Candidate" for reference). It might be worth pointing out that water boarding was used against supposed terrorist leaders of Al-Qaeda by the previous administration (no sense in dragging that up now). It might be worth pointing out that US torturers are hypocrites in that they are violating the Geneva Conventions while holding an entire country to ransom over some terrorists. It might be worth pointing out that the current administration, in contrast, has used water boarding against senior Al-Qaeda terrorists, while using their legal teams to relentlessly litigate charges against them. It might be worth pointing out that nowhere in the world, save for one tribe in the Congo, has the government killed any domestic political dissidents. It might be worth pointing out that the US routinely does business with communist dictators, while dumping on socialist governments.
