* Slideshows. Slideshow programs are generally used to deliver a presentation in the form of a series of individual images. You can make a slideshow with effects like image masks and perspective transforms, or use a button that adds audio, narration, music, and so on. Some slideshow programs allow you to set transitions between slides, so that the presentation flows naturally from one slide to the next. * Customizing background images. Web designers usually use Photoshop or Photoshop Elements to create background images for their websites. If you're new to Photoshop or have never worked in web design, you might find it a little daunting to start. Luckily, there are plenty of tutorials available online that teach you everything you need to know about creating such images. Several Photoshop books written for intermediate to advanced users have sections devoted to web design, such as _Photoshop_ for Web Design_ (Avery) and _Web Design Workflows with Adobe Photoshop CS6_ (Meyerowitz). * Multimedia editing. Whether you're working on video, music, or interactive design, Photoshop is a popular solution. It's designed for editing still images, but the program also has tools for capturing and editing video and audio. A growing number of professionals use Photoshop's bitmap editing capabilities to create digital art. Although Photoshop can't compete with dedicated art programs such as Art Rage (www.artrage.com) or Photoshop Art Factory (www.aitographics.com), it's still a really useful tool for concept, design, illustration, and painting.

Saturday, April 10, 2012 Massive Bombing of Syria! Will Obama Do It Again? ... if Congress doesn't act. It's not as if the world hasn't heard the president's impatience with the Senate. President Obama broke his silence Saturday morning to say that Bashar al-Assad and his military must go in order to put an end to the violence in Syria. Obama said there is no military solution to the conflict and that he cannot stand by and allow the slaughter to continue: "The situation in Syria has been grave, but it has been deteriorating." "There have been reports that chemical weapons have been used. That if in fact that proved to be the case, that would be a breach of international law and would demand a response. "Now, we don't have evidence to verify that claim, and in fact I'm told by our intelligence agencies that that is not the case, but if it is verified, then obviously there is further cause for concern." "We are prepared to exercise all of our capacities under Chapter VII — I want to emphasize that — but I will not be the president of the world." Asked if he has a "red line" that he is unwilling to cross, he said, "That's not how the president of the United States works." "I don't set red lines. I don't. I've demonstrated that over and over again. We don't set arbitrary red lines for ourselves, and we're not going to set arbitrary red lines for others. We've got a bunch of problems in the world." Yet just last year, the president was proposing that the use of force could be the end result of Congressional approval. "The president has already been very clear that the use of chemical weapons would change his calculus about the situation on the ground, and it is an issue that we would have to discuss with Congress," the president said. Now, Obama is saying that, despite his previous comment, the use of force against Syria would not need approval from Congress. "We continue to have very serious conversations with our allies and friends, the international community about our response if in fact chemical weapons were used.

Given a content type, is there a way to to obtain a hash of this content type? so say I have a custom field labeled'my_custom_field' that references this content type as 'post_type' is there a way to get a hash of this content type somehow? e.g. something like this: $content_type_hash = hash('sha256', $entity->get('my_custom_field')); thanks in advance! A: I don't think there's such an API function, but using a method like this, you can generate the hash: $contentType = 'your_content_type'; $entity = \Drupal::entityTypeManager()->getStorage('your_content_type')->load($content_id); $entity_hash = sha256(serialize($entity)); I'm not
