The car will go on sale in 2019 and will probably be the first electric model in the Skoda line-up. It will pack a 75kW motor that can offer a range of around 225 miles. The car will share the platform with the Zoe (initially released in 2015), however it has been extensively updated with more space and features. The car will have five seats and can be ordered as a seven seater. Thanks to the different battery, it has a higher battery capacity of just over 250 kilowatts. Skoda wanted to work on a model similar to the Nissan Leaf, with the exception of the Smartphone connectivity. It seems like the company couldn't build a proper car, so they went with a car that's a little more expensive and cut back on the styling. The car will make its world debut at the Frankfurt Auto Show next year. It will be interesting to see what kind of mileage the car is able to deliver. The new entry-level battery pack from VW Group that's on offer in the Porsche Taycan will be more than capable, and will be a good indicator of how the electric performance will be.Nucleoside analogs (NA) are commonly used antiviral drugs. NA interfere with viral DNA polymerases, one of the ways for many viruses to replicate
