But why do you need to open your computer to check the temperature? This is why we created FastGC, a small application that allows you to check your CPU, GPU and system temperature at a glance, without having to open your computer. All you have to do is run FastGC, and everything you want to know will be displayed in the status bar, so you will never have to open your computer to see what's going on. For your convenience, here's how FastGC works: When you run this application for the first time, it will launch to the desktop automatically. The application will inform you if the system has already been launched, and if it's done so, it will launch the default location of the system, which is inside the %SystemDrive% folder. In addition, the program will offer a choice to open your default browser. With this option, you can link to a website to set it as the default one. Once the system is launched, you will see a status bar that will display the current operating temperature, your core temperature and your GPU temperature. The temperature can be displayed in Celsius or Fahrenheit, depending on what you prefer. You can also increase or decrease the scale by pressing the "-" or "+" buttons, respectively. If you want to refresh, simply press the F5 key on your keyboard. If you want to change your default location, simply click on the refresh button, and a drop down menu will appear. Simply choose your preferred location, and press the OK button. Please note that this software is not developed by this author. Source code and parts of the design were derived from this software,
