The results are eye-popping and massively immersive. Players will behave like they do in real life, running, sprinting, dribbling, feinting and seeing the ball coming, while defenders will always react as you'd expect. "It's a new era for FIFA and we've delivered all that and more in FIFA 22," said Producer Nick Channon. "Our work on 'HyperMotion Technology' has been a massive collaboration between all of us at EA SPORTS. Everything from player model creation and animation to ball physics and control is all enhanced to work with the extra movement on the pitch in real-life. You can watch a match up close and even see your own player video-game style, having their every move captured. "We're taking full advantage of the technology to deliver something the world has never seen before." New to the game is "Team of the Season" that highlights players based on their individual performances within a specific club and competition. You can dive deeper into details to see how they're performing based on the style of play they prefer. New motion capture technology also delivers enhanced graphics and visual effects. Players and players' boots look more realistic and the stadiums are rendered in incredible detail. The 2019/2020 Season will start on Sept 4, 2019 and run through to the end of the 2020/2021 Season. Minute by minute, in real-life Watch a full-match simulation of this season's World Cup, using motion capture data to animate players and the stadium. From the opening kick to final whistle, experience the challenges, clashes and thrills on and off the pitch. The new World Cup mode delivers an all-new sports experience, featuring 20 different paths to the final, with the potential to become the next two-time World Cup champion. It's an epic journey and players can participate in any game mode in any World Cup across the match days. The new World Cup format was a close call for FIFA 20. The mode was available for the majority of FIFA 20's development but the developer's focus shifted away from the mode towards the Ultimate Team mode for the final months of development. Based on player feedback from around the world, the developers decided to make adjustments to World Cup mode, including making final rounds more difficult.
