PUBLIC LAWS OF ENGLAND The English Premier League have announced a new rule requiring the use of non-blinking video technology in the Premier League and Championship matches from the beginning of the 2013/14 season. Ahead of the World Cup, The Premier League and the National Football League have joined forces with the SportGrounds company to make sure their matches are fully compliant with the new World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) anti-doping code. This includes putting in place a new set of measures aimed at keeping players free of banned substances and increasing the effectiveness of testing. BANNED SUBSTANCES WADA have identified a number of banned substances, including those containing Modafinil, the anti-narcoleptic drug that helps players stay awake while playing. The Premier League and NFL believe that the use of the anti-narcoleptic drug Modafinil by players causes a significant and unfair advantage over their opponents, but will the vast majority of players use this drug during a match? With well over 400 EPL and NFL players banned in 2012/13, it is unlikely that many use it at all, so the anti-doping measures implemented by the Premier League and the National Football League will have little effect. TIMING OF THE TESTING Tests must be carried out between the start and the end of each quarter. The test must be carried out within 90 minutes of the match starting and must be repeated if the player is found to be using a banned substance. This means that a player will have to make a decision which would help his team win within 90 minutes of his team starting the match. THE NEW TEST The Anti-Doping Infrared Test works by directing infrared energy at a player's body. The substance can be detected by any of the five WADA approved anti-doping laboratories. SPORTSGEAR FIFA Football 2013 will be compatible with the EA SPORTS Authentic team kit, allowing you to show your support for your favourite team in style. The new kit uses a mesh upper, featuring a

FIFA is a sports video game franchise owned by Electronic Arts, and developed and published by EA Sports. The game centers on association football (often simply called football or soccer).

It was originally released for the original PlayStation in September 1997. The series became available for the PlayStation 2 and Xbox 360 consoles in 2001 and 2003 respectively. The series' name comes from the first two words of the game's tagline: "The Name of the Game is...", a reference to its controversial use of the word "soccer" in the UK (British English) and US (American English) when including the country-specific name for the sport. The EA of FIFA is a common theme in other sports video games. A popular example is Sega's NHL series, which was also called EA Sports Hockey before this series' name was changed in 2009. The trademark of EA Sports was first filed in June 1996 for use on computer, video, and video game consoles, amongst other areas. FIFA is a popular video game that reaches a global audience and affects sports and political lives around the world. In total, over 75 million copies of the game have been sold worldwide.
