Adobe Photoshop What is Photoshop? This tool was first introduced in 1987. When it was first introduced it was known as "Photoshop," but it was later renamed to remove the word "Photoshop." According to Adobe, it makes editing images a "fun and easy" process. Adobe, once the leader in graphic design, is on its death bed because of a huge copyright lawsuit. Its subsidiary, Adobe Systems Inc. (previously Softimage, Adobe Systems Inc. Research, and Adobe R&D) was sued by Apple Inc. for Macintosh computer software it produced (the famous Deltagraphs was part of the software in question). Despite a loss in the case, the suit caused the company to change its focus from developing the graphics design program Adobe Illustrator to developing new programs. It did not do well at first, but gained the reputation it has today by adopting a user-friendly interface. "The best way to paint on a canvas is with a brush, not a stencil. rate before CABG and were reassessed 1 year after CABG. \[[@ref13]\] The scores for the RH system of angiography were lower in all domains and 7 variables (total score) in patients with the right and left main coronary artery and side branches involved in the angiogram in comparison with the scores for the control group, and this suggests that the RH system of angiography is more effective than conventional methods. The number of patients in the present study, however, was small, and it is necessary to assess the incidence of coronary occlusion and the time needed for postoperative care in a larger number of patients. In the present study, the patients showed high satisfaction for the hemodynamic status in the postoperative period; moreover, 90% of patients expressed that they would undergo the procedure again if the clinical symptoms occurred. These findings are consistent with those of other studies. \[[@ref12][@ref14][@ref15]\] There are some limitations in the present study. First, the use of the hemodynamic system of angiography was performed by a single operator. Therefore, although the results of the present study are convincing, they must be confirmed using a system that has a more objective assessment of angiography. Second, the present study was performed on the patients with single-vessel disease only, so that we did not evaluate the extent of disease. Third, the number of patients was small. However, we believe that this study has at least two implications. First, this study is the first study on the use of the hemodynamic system of angiography in Japan. To the best of our knowledge, however, there are no such studies. Therefore, the present study indicates the feasibility of the hemodynamic system of angiography. Second, the findings obtained in the present study can be valuable for predicting the time needed for postoperative care. This information is very important for lessening anxiety of patients and reducing costs of postoperative care. Conclusions {#sec1-5} ===== In conclusion, the hemodynamic system of angiography was safe and feasible and showed high reproducibility for assessment of coronary circulation. The effectiveness of the system was also validated in comparison with conventional methods. The system seems to be a promising method to predict the time needed for postoperative care. Financial support and sponsorship {#sec2-3} ----- Nil.

Factors influencing the results of a clinical trial in stuttering management: a 5-year follow-up study. To study the characteristics of and to formulate a descriptive model for stuttering patients who are potential candidates for stuttering management. During the last 18 years, 1704 stuttering patients were referred to a single speech-language pathologist. Based on his examination and diagnostic evaluations, each patient was offered a management program. Information was collected over a 5-year follow-up period regarding (1) the timing and number of consultations with the speech-language pathologist, (2) the outcome of the management program, (3) the changes in the relationship between the patient and the speech-language pathologist, and (4) the characteristics of and adjustments made for each patient. Fifty-four percent of the initial referrals were to outpatients. Each stuttering patient had been referred an average of 8.9 times before the initial consultation with the speech-language pathologist. The management program that was given to each patient was typically intensive (4-12 weeks) and multiple (3-9). As a result of the intensive treatment, 52% of the patients who were followed for the 5-year follow-up period were able to speak with relative ease. Factors that were associated with improvement included (1) a positive therapeutic alliance, (2) a positive therapeutic alliance that continued to grow stronger through treatment, (3) a positive therapeutic alliance that continued to grow stronger through treatment, and (4) a lack of progression of stuttering severity. The factors that were associated with difficulty in resolving the problem included (1) a negative therapeutic alliance, (2) a negative therapeutic alliance that continued to grow weaker through treatment, (3) a negative therapeutic alliance that continued to grow weaker through treatment, and (4) increased severity of stuttering. The factors that were associated with a poor prognosis included (1) a negative therapeutic alliance, (2) a negative therapeutic alliance that continued to grow weaker through treatment, (3) a negative therapeutic alliance that continued to grow weaker through treatment, and (4) a negative therapeutic alliance that continued to grow weaker through treatment. Polynomials with rational roots Let  $f(n)$  be a polynomial, and suppose the all the zeros of  $f(n)$  are all rational numbers. Is it true that if  $f(n)$  is not identically 0, then  $f(n)$  is divisible by some prime number? I haven't done
