Q: Maclaurin series of inverse function I've got a question about Maclaurin series of inverse function. I was just looking at this video on Maclaurin series and I noticed that depending on the value of the function, the Maclaurin series might not necessarily converge. For instance consider the following argument: Let $f(x) = \sqrt{1+x}$ then the Maclaurin series for f^{-1} is $1 + \frac{x}{2} + \frac{x^2}{4} + \frac{x^3}{8} + \frac{x^4}{16} + \frac{x^5}{16} + \frac{x^6}{32} + \frac{x^7}{32} + \frac{x^8}{64} + \dots$ plugging $x=1$ in it yields $f^{-1}(1) = 1$ which is wrong since $f^{-1}(1)$ is infinite. So I was wondering why when the range of f is finite, then in general, the Maclaurin series has to converge? Thanks in advance.

A: You're looking at a textbook example of a domain in which Maclaurin series may not make sense. If the Maclaurin series converges in the domain of f^{-1} then it must converge as well in all the points above its range. In your example you have $x=1$, hence $1=f(1)$

The expression of cyclooxygenase-2 (COX-2) was immunohistochemically evaluated in 100 endometrial cancers to investigate whether COX-2 expression correlated with the prognosis and effect of progestogens and tamoxifen on the patients. All samples had been obtained by biopsy. In 56% of the tumours COX-2 expression was observed; 30% were positive in 100% of the sample areas and 26% in Inhibition of different stages of pre-cancer development in mice after oral administration of non-alkaloid fractions of leaves of Manilkara zapota (Sapotaceae). The non-alkaloid fractions of Manilkara zapota, belonging to Sapotaceae family, are a great source of secondary metabolites (flavonoids and saponins), which have been described as inhibitors of a variety of cellular targets. Here, we describe the effects of extracts from leaves of M. zapota on skin and liver tissue from an established model of chemical carcinogenesis induced in SKH1 mice. The studies were carried out with extracts of M. zapota administered orally before or after the challenge with the carcinogen 7,12-dimethylbenz[a]anthracene (DMBA). We found that both extracts were able to inhibit all stages of pre-cancer development in mice. More specifically, skin warts, papillomas, carcinomas and liver tumors were all inhibited by both extract preparations. Brain of Giants (2013)[1] is a boardgame designed by Matthew Inman and published by Small Box Arrangements Ltd.[2] It was released on Sept 16, 2013, with a Kickstarter in February 2013[3] to make a physical copy of the game that would not be available at retail locations.[4] The game was released on Kickstarter with the goal to raise $10,000, to which they raised $29,655 with 103 days.[3] Gigantosaurus (2013, Small Box Arrangements Ltd.) is an all-ages game of "wicker-framed board chases and colossal vengeance". The game is a boardgame featuring "10 colossal mecha-dinosaurs",[5] all designed by other artists of The Oatmeal.[6] Players take on the roles of 10 giant behemoths: "Alpha", "Hector", "Canary", "Donkey-Boy", "Gigantosaurus", "Irwin", "Kirby", "Kinze", "Lunar", and "Singer", each of whom have their own abilities and shortcomings. As the game starts, the players each start at the same position with a single action to play. As players take actions and gain experience, they can buy cards to improve their abilities. Once a player's action is complete and they are ready to fight, they drive into the opposing team's formation. During a turn, players can move up to three of their actions on the board. There are four score categories: Points, Gravity, Heel Spikes, and Killer Action. Points are earned by sinking your opponents, while gravity is the burden of landing on your opponents' cards. Two cards will automatically be played once in each turn, and the players may also draw cards at the start of their turns.

Contents Gameplay The game is played on a four-by-four grid. Each round, each monster will be assigned a movement direction, beginning at the edge of the board nearest to the "center circle". The monsters always start at the edge of the board that is closest to "where they were stacked" when they originally rolled. On each turn, players can select whether to move forward one space, back two spaces, left two spaces, or right two spaces (note that there is no "center" in the game). The first player to "touch" an opponent's element activates that element's action, which will always be the traditional "attack". The
