
groups: 120 (of these: 96 children of urban group and 24 children of rural group) in the period from September 2003 to April 2004 were shown to be positive CMV infection. The comparative analysis of the medical data obtained from the children of the urban group (n = 96) and rural group (n = 24) was carried out, mainly in terms of: frequency of comorbid diseases, results of laboratory examinations, the severity of the disease and also the administration of medicines containing theophylline. In the examination of the blood samples of the investigated children with a high level of antibodies to CMV an increase in the percentage of children with such antibodies, as a comorbid disease, was revealed. The laboratory findings did not differ significantly between children with and without the presence of positive CMV infection, with exception of the decrease in the percentage of neutrophils in the children of the urban group. A relationship was established between the presence of positive CMV infection and the higher level of theophylline in the course of treatment in both the urban group and rural group. This disclosure relates generally to labeling or marking devices and more particularly to a paper dispenser that dispenses a paper roll in a predetermined length. Labeling devices are generally portable devices used to
