The SPA said it had information about the incident and a number of protesters had been injured. It said the army had been deployed to Al-Fashir, the commercial hub of the country's second biggest province, where it was "firmly behind the police" and had been seizing demonstrators' belongings in recent days. In January, a number of areas across Sudan were rocked by protests following rising prices, fuel shortages, health care deficits and other shortcomings. Overnight on Tuesday, security forces opened fire on protesters at a workshop protesting against economic conditions in the northern town of Atbara, killing at least 27 people, according to the SPA. Earlier in the week, the Egyptian security forces fired on protesters at a sit-in outside the Egyptian embassy in the Sudanese capital of Khartoum to demand the release of jailed Sudanese journalist Ibrahim Halak, the SPA said. Mohammed Osman, a spokesman for the Sudanese army, said the Egyptian security forces opened fire on the protesters, who were about 100 metres from the embassy building, during a protest demonstration led by members of the outlawed Muslim Brotherhood. The Egyptian military said its forces opened fire after protesters threw stones at the embassy. Al Jazeera's Imtiaz Tyab, reporting from Cairo, said the protest was about three hours long and outside the embassy. "When the protesters approached the Egyptian embassy there were shots fired and live ammunition was used," Tyab said, adding that Egyptian forces had used tear gas. Witnesses said snipers were outside the embassy and there were conflicting reports as to who opened fire first. The officials say the Egyptian security forces opened fire. Witnesses say the

GS1's tyre and suspension business is being sold to a group led by Japan's Bridgestone Corp. The bid is the latest sign of consolidation within the industry, which has seen deals involving almost every major tyre manufacturer. Bridgestone was one of the first manufacturers to push for consolidation in the business by buying another, Michelin North America, in the early 2000s. It followed a similar trend by India's Apollo Tyres, which bought Goodyear's significant US operation in 2010. The cash-and-share deal, which involves ZF Friedrichshafen, a German-based manufacturer of engines, gearboxes and suspensions that says it will help it to become a dominant player in the European market, values GS1 at around $5.8 billion (€5.2 billion). "We are pleased that Bridgestone continues to invest in its global presence through its ownership of highly profitable businesses and the acquisition of GS1's business," Jerome Poupart, chief executive of Bridgestone, said in a statement on Wednesday. "This acquisition gives Bridgestone the opportunity to operate a powerful global automotive business with strong brands and technological advantages," he added. GS1 produces tyres and suspensions for cars, including for Mitsubishi Motors and Volkswagen, as well as buses and trucks for Greyhound, which is owned by American transport group Greyhound Lines Inc. Mitsubishi Motors and American law firm Jones Day advised Bridgestone. Industry consolidation is likely to continue as manufacturers seek scale to help them deal with rising costs for key raw materials, such as steel and aluminium, and to better manage the carbon footprint. This year's recalls involving potentially millions of cars in the US over faulty Takata Corp air bags have highlighted the industry's inability to tackle safety problems. In the United States, companies such as Ford Motor Co and Honda Motor Co have been delisted from their former mutual funds because they fell short of meeting the federal government's minimum requirements. Although the cost of lithium-ion batteries has come down, they still account for a large portion of an electric-vehicle's total cost, with the price of the US-made Panasonic Corp battery pack for Tesla Motors Inc's Model S likely to top $3,100 this year. Consolidation also helps manufacturers win government contracts and avoid paying higher
