6. PS4 has a GPU that's almost twice as fast as PS3's. It is a fact. It is also a secret. Sony confirmed to Polygon that the PlayStation 4 hardware has a custom-designed graphics co-processor. The chip is built to deliver the equivalent of a five-year-old PC's graphics processing unit (GPU), according to sources who are familiar with the design of the system. The PS4 chip will be built with a combination of high-performance graphics technology and low-power DRAM. It comes with instructions that enhance performance and can help reduce power usage.

Polygon has previously detailed the design of the chip. "The current design is both more powerful and more power-efficient than the older GPU, which is to say that it is a massive upgrade to the platform," said one source. "It's a really good upgrade and it's an impressive leap forward." The PS3 did not feature a custom graphics processing unit, instead relying on a combination of the Cell architecture and a custom-designed graphics processor. The latest and greatest PlayStation 3, however, has a 500MHz PS3 custom graphics processor with 1.6 billion transistors, while the PS4 has a roughly twice as powerful chip with 4 billion transistors. The GPU is the heart of a system. The CPU handles the heavy lifting and can make applications run more efficiently. The GPU is what makes graphics look better and more lifelike. With a big chip like the one found in the PS4, Sony can deliver a console with a much faster processor, while keeping the cost of the hardware relatively low. A low-cost chip can also help create higher-end e79caf774b
