You can now independently set when the system may hibernate, turn off the computer after a given amount of time, or sleep, and whether it should wake up when you press a key. Simply press Windows+P+R. Then, select the Power Options from the menu that appears. If you have more than one battery or if the computer is connected to an external battery, a battery icon will appear next to the setting titles. The icons will change color when the computer is on battery power or when one battery is charging while the other is not. Use the icons to select the battery that will be used for power management. The system can choose which battery to use, and you can force the system to use either battery even if the computer is plugged in. This is useful if the computer is attached to a battery and the primary battery is depleted. Note: You can also control the wireless keyboard and mouse

USB ports disabler can disable any port on your computer and allows you to enable and disable the USB ports with ease.Downloads:5869 - Shareware - Download NowWe're an independent, student-run newsroom. The Daily Californian covers the city of Berkeley and the campus in unparalleled detail, all while training the future of the journalism industry. Consider making a donation to support the coverage that shapes the face of Berkeley. The campus police department's high-speed pursuit policy, which was updated in November 2015, allowed officers to speed as they chased vehicles in Berkeley from Aug. 15 to Nov. 30, 2015. The speed limit was lowered from 35 mph to 30 mph during the chase hours, and was not lowered at all while cops were pursuing vehicles on northbound I-80. A UCPD spokesperson said that the initial speed limit was not changed in the entire UCPD zone, which includes all 22 UC Berkeley campus neighborhoods as well as area streets. The original pursuit policy, which was first introduced in 2013, allowed for the pursuit of vehicles with suspects in them if the pursuit is deemed necessary for the safety of the campus and the surrounding area. A policy update was filed in the spring of 2015 by campus Police Chief Margo Bennett, which changed the policy to mirror the guidelines of the California Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV). John Colangelo, the campus' chief of communications, said that the policy was updated to match the DMV chase policy in July of 2015. The current policy was effective on Aug. 15 of 2015, but it was not updated to reflect the new policy until Nov. 20 of that year. "If an [UCPD] officer is pursuing a suspect on campus or in Berkeley, they are not permitted to use a vehicle with a top speed greater than 50 mph," Colangelo said. "The pursuit policy is revised every three years to keep it current with the California statutes." Colangelo said that the current speed limit of 50 mph was determined in light of the speed of today's vehicles, as well as a change in the allowable limits for the UCPD zone. According to Bennett, the policy was updated to reduce the speed at which campus officers can chase vehicles to 25 mph. Bennett said that UCPD officers will go as fast as they need to on campus and in Berkeley to chase down dangerous suspects. "The
