In a manufacturing process of a semiconductor device, a plasma processing apparatus using plasma has been used to perform processes such as etching, deposition, oxidation, and cleaning of a semiconductor substrate. For example, in a typical plasma processing apparatus, a processing chamber configured to perform a plasma process is maintained in a vacuum atmosphere and a substrate processing is performed by causing plasma to be generated in the processing chamber. Patent Document 1 discloses a plasma processing apparatus in which a cooling medium is supplied to the substrate processing chamber to cool the substrate processing chamber after the completion of the processing and the substrate processing chamber is maintained in a vacuum state or a vacuum atmosphere is introduced into the processing chamber. In the plasma processing apparatus disclosed in Patent Document 1, the processing chamber is heated by an external heater. For example, the external heater is heated by electrical power supplied from an external power source. Alternatively, the external heater may be heated by radiant heat of plasma generated in the plasma processing apparatus. If the heater is in operation, the temperature of the substrate processing chamber can be maintained at a predetermined temperature. In the plasma processing apparatus, the substrate processing chamber is cooled by the external heater while the substrate processing chamber is maintained in the vacuum state or the vacuum atmosphere. Since an increase in the temperature of the substrate processing chamber in a short period of time results in a decrease in the processing capacity of the plasma processing apparatus, it is desirable to suppress the temperature rise in the substrate processing chamber. Japanese Patent Laid-Open Publication No. 2003-152178 discloses a plasma processing apparatus that includes a heating apparatus for heating a reaction vessel in which a substrate to be processed is disposed. In this plasma processing apparatus, a heating apparatus is in operation during a reaction process in order to reduce the time taken for the substrate to be processed to reach a predetermined temperature./*

The invention also relates to a device for carrying out this method. The invention is applicable particularly in laser spectroscopy. It is to be particularly preferred for the processing of chemical compounds, for example gases and/or liquids, using laser spectroscopy in the search for the most sensitive and rapid analytical method. In this regard, the absorption spectrum of a substance under analysis is measured interferometrically. In this context, pulsed laser sources of several wavelengths are used. The samples are irradiated in pulse form and the laser light is analyzed in the form of laser or photocurrent. The laser pulse has a time characteristic, which is to be analyzed; in pulsed laser spectroscopy, this characteristic is generally in the range from
