Dear Editor, Despite public health strategies to prevent the spread of influenza, influenza-like illnesses (ILIs) are a significant problem in developing countries. Influenza immunization rates are low in Turkey, and influenza is responsible for a large number of yearly respiratory illnesses. We examined influenza A and B cases recorded from January 2004 to December 2005 in hospitals affiliated to Istanbul Health Directorate. The week-to-week trend of the cases was analysed. A total of 15,392 ILIs were recorded during the study period. Of these, 789 (5.1%) were positive for influenza virus. The distribution of influenza type was as follows: A (48.7%), B (34.8%), and mixed (17.5%). The influenza season was defined as the week in which more than 5% of the cases were positive for influenza virus. The seasonal peaks of influenza cases were identified as follows: season 1 (September and October), season 2 (December and January), season 3 (February and March), and season 4 (April and May). The peak for season 1 was similar with those reported previously, but the later peak for season 2, 3, and 4 were higher than those in previous studies \[[@CR1]\]. Season 1 lasted 10 weeks; season 2 started in week 38 (October 17, 2004) and was followed by season 3, which lasted 10 weeks, from week 39 (November 19, 2004) to week 49 (April 16, 2005). There were 21 weeks without influenza activity in season 1. Season 2 and 3 were preceded by season 1. Season 4 started in week 9 (October 28, 2005) and lasted 11 weeks. Flu A cases of season 4 were 83% (633/755), 89% (159/178), and 88% (139/155) of all laboratory-confirmed flu A cases in weeks 9, 10, and 11, respectively (Figure [1])(#Fig1){ref-
