To investigate the prognostic value of lymph node ratio (LNR) and its relationship with total number of lymph nodes (N), metastasis location and involved nodal stations. This study reviewed 183 patients with cervical cancer who were treated in Zhongshan Hospital from 2005 to 2012. The median follow-up period was 35 months. LNR and number of N were calculated by the number of metastatic or positive lymph nodes divided by the number of positive nodes in the examined lymph nodes. The receiver operating characteristic curve was used to determine the cutoff value of LNR and number of N to predict overall survival. The Spearman correlation was used to evaluate the association between LNR and number of N. LNR ranged from 0.09 to 0.80. The cutoff value for LNR was 0.35. Patients with LNR \geq 0.35 had poorer overall survival than those with LNR $<$ 0.35. * * * Copyright (C) 2008-2011 The Android Open Source Project * * Licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0 (the "License"); * you may not use this file except in compliance with the License. * You may obtain a copy of the License at * * * *
