As part of an overhaul of the league's basketball operations and broadcast assets, the owners have voted to keep NBA commissioner Adam Silver as the league's CEO and Jerry Buss and the Buss family as owners of the Los Angeles Lakers and Clippers, respectively. "While no single person, entity or moment will define the NBA, the contributions made by Mr. Buss, Mr. Silver and the Buss family will serve as the foundation for what the league strives to achieve," the other owners said in a statement.

Only one other commissioner ever had been voted in as NBA chairman, Tom Werner in 1998. Buss, 81, has been a driving force behind the Lakers' and Clippers' success. He won five NBA championships with the Celtics, Lakers, Rockets, 76ers and Jazz. He is survived by his wife, Jeanie Buss, daughters Jeanie and Linda, and sons Jim and John. Don't Edit He also kept the Lakers and Clippers competitive in the NBA despite never winning a title or advancing to the NBA Finals. The Buss family will continue to control day-to-day operations at the Clippers and Lakers. Don't Edit Don't Edit

The NBA also announced new TV deals with ESPN and Turner, making it the first time an NBA TV contract has been assigned to the TV network with the highest rate. The deals are effective until 2032. The league is also doing away with regional TV networks. The Atlanta Hawks and Memphis Grizzlies will now be rebranded as the Atlanta Hawks and Memphis Grizzlies, respectively. With the Clippers still having no TV deal as of now, the Buss family is expected to pursue a deal. Don't Edit Steve Tobias | The Associated Press The NBA and AT&T announced a new multi-year marketing partnership at the draft in Brooklyn. The league is replacing more of its on-air talent. The Lakers will be seeing Phil Jackson return to the sidelines as

Improved diagnostic accuracy of clinical criteria in the detection of malignant melanoma of the skin. Cutaneous malignant melanoma is rarely diagnosed at an early stage, leading to a poor prognosis. In an effort to improve early diagnosis, we evaluated the diagnostic accuracy of clinical criteria to determine the optimal clinical features for detecting melanoma. The study population consisted of 145 patients
