Click here EurActiv: German companies to furlough 2,000 workers and reduce staff to 30% in response to Covid-19 Companies across Germany have cut 2,000 jobs, or nearly a fifth of their total workforce, through the Covid-19 lockdown, and in some sectors the crisis is so severe that staff have been virtually halved. This came as Chancellor Angela Merkel's BfV domestic intelligence service reported that far-right political parties are establishing contact with the European far-right, in the wake of Germany's recent election result that has ushered in an uncomfortable anti-immigration, pro-nationalist new wave in German politics. Worst cases Earlier this week in the run-up to the German elections, the chief of Germany's domestic intelligence service, Hans-Georg Maaßen, drew attention to "extreme right-wing tendencies" and accused some politicians of "heeding the call of far-right populists". According to a DPA analysis, this has set alarm bells ringing for the BfV. However, it has acknowledged that such parties are better organised than they have been in the past. This has enabled them to establish contact with the old-school neo-Nazis now more than ever before. "The far right is no longer simply an empty space within the political spectrum. Extreme right-wing parties are approaching the electorate, offering their services and networking," the BfV report stated. In addition, they are "concentrating on geographic regions, rather than on one single election region
