For.Dialdehyde polyesters (DAPEs) are useful as starting materials in the preparation of polyurethane and polyurea polymers. These polymers have utility in a number of applications including paints, coatings, sealants, adhesives, elastomers, and the like. For example, contact lenses are made from polyurethane. The dialdehyde polyester includes a 1,3-dioxane ring, which tends to undergo ring opening polymerization upon the addition of water. For example, with the reaction of a cyclic polyester and an alcohol to form the corresponding polyether, a 1,3-dioxane ring is formed in the resultant polyether. In particular, if the alcohol has high affinity to water, the ring can be opened by the presence of moisture in the air. Many substrates, such as nylon-6 or PVC, commonly used in the manufacture of contact lenses, will degrade if they are exposed to water. Thus, the dialdehyde polyester is prepared to avoid exposure to moisture. Generally, the process used for preparing dialdehyde polyesters involves reacting diacids or diesters of diols with aldol condensate in a solvent and optionally with a catalyst. The process is preferably carried out with a large excess of one or more aldol condensate. For example, B. R. Choudhary et al., Journal of Polymer Science: Part A 6d1f23a050
