Medicopter 117 helps you to save lives, from the streets to the skies. Step in and become a police medic, aiming to fight the crime, and solve the puzzles in your way. Water-soluble substances, such as stearic acid, glycerol, polyethylene glycol or the like are used as a base material in various fields such as cosmetics, food, and chemicals, and recently, the establishment of a technology for the production of a water-soluble polymer is desirable from the viewpoint of the environmental burden. As a method of producing a water-soluble polymer, there are known a method of polymerizing a monomer with using a polyfunctional initiator (Patent Document 1), and a method of using a boron compound as a catalyst to obtain a polycondensed product, and then hydrolyzing the polycondensed product in the presence of an alkali (Patent Document 2). Moreover, a method of producing a water-soluble polymer by polymerizing a water-soluble monomer in the presence of a polyvalent metal salt or boron compound, and in turn hydrolyzing the polymer with an alkali, is also known (Patent Document 3). However, water-soluble polymers have various problems in industrially producing them. That is, in the case of a method of producing the water-soluble polymer with using a polyfunctional initiator (Patent Document 1), productivity is poor since a high-molecular-weight polymer having a desired structure cannot be efficiently obtained by the single step reaction and the polymerization reaction should be stopped after the polymerization for the prevention of chain termination reaction. Further, even if the polymerization is stopped after the polymerization, it is necessary to dilute and filter the reaction solution, which results in very complicated operation. In the method of producing the water-soluble polymer by polymerizing the water-soluble monomer in the presence of the polyvalent metal salt or boron compound, the polymerization is generally conducted as a two-step polymerization, that is, a first polymerization at a relatively low concentration to prepare a polymer precursor, and a second polymerization at a high concentration to obtain a water-soluble polymer, and then the polymer precursor is hydroly
